To Whom It May Concern:

We used Monica Barzilay to help us find an apartment for our move to Geneva. The apartment is quite satisfactory, good size and in a good neighborhood. The vacancy rate in Geneva apparently is only 0.17%, so there were not a lot of choices to be had. She first directed us to web sites of apartment rental agencies to view pictures posted there. Once we had narrowed the list down to 2 or 3 possibilities, she gave us her opinion of which we should take based on having visited them and knowing the buildings.

When we arrived in Geneva (in the early evening on a Friday), she met us at the apartment to give us the keys and show us briefly what we needed to know that night). She came over the next day and spent the afternoon with us – helping us fill out the check list of what was in the apartment and its condition; giving us some useful tips about living here; and driving us around for an hour or two to show us the lay of the land and to point out useful places near our house (hairdresser, post office, good restaurants, etc.). She also helped us locate a suitcase we'd managed to leave at the airport. Over the next 10 days, she was helpful at getting the apartment management company to fix the things that needed attention at the apartment and at giving us guidance on how to take care of other tasks. She let my wife know about the American International Women's Club – a good way to get to know people, and to get involved in activities – and has subsequently called once or twice to let us know about events we might want to consider attending.

I would certainly recommend Barzilay Services to others.
